THE WESTERN

QUARTERLY REVIEW.

VOLUME I.

CINCINNATI:
J. S. HITCHCOCK, PUBLISHER.
1849.

A89
W52556

B.M.Q.

ERRATA.

In the printing of the first number of this work one article suffered so much by typographical errors, that a correction is due to the subject and author of that communication, as well as to the character of the Quarterly. In Art. XV. please notice the following:

Page 152, in "The Bridal," 16th line, read "shading the" for "shading her."
Page 153, in same poem, last line but one, read "of the humid year."
Page 159, in "May," 10th line from top of page, read "brightening as it onward goes."
Page 161, in "The Mountain Paths," second line of third stanza, read "have not all yet left," &c.
Page 162, in same poem, third line of second stanza, omit article "the," and in fifth line same stanza, read "and from each tree-top."
Page 164, in "In Truth and Freedom," last line of first stanza, read "and its might."
Lage 166, in "Conservatism," last line of third stanza, read "that he findeth in his route."
Page 167, in same poem, last last line of seventh stanza, from top of page, omit "to," and read "up the heavens,"
Page 169, in "Fifty Years Ago," in fifth line from top of page, read "freedom we sought," &c.

Also in Art. III. some corrections are necessary.

Page 35, foot of right hand column, read "773,377," instead of "993,379."
Page 38, read "240,000," for "24,000."

The second number will be found quite accurate, as we intend each subsequent number shall be.

A

CONTENTS—NO. I.

	Remarks Introductory	5
Art.	I.—The Youth of Christ	13
	II.—Intellectual Union, a Poem	27
	III.—The Land Question	28
	IV.—The Poets, a Poem	44
	V.—Ethology	46
	VI.—American Eloquence	51
	VI.—Death in the Country, a Poem	65
	VII.—Neurology	66
	VIII.—The Dominie, a Poem	86
	IX.—Change, a Scientific Paper	87
	X.—Powers' Greek Slave	95
	XI.—Pitied Love, a Poem	99
	XII.—Review of the Free Soil Movement	101
	XIII.—The Place of Graves, a Poem	111
	XIV.—A Philosophical Sketch	112
	XV.—William D. Gallagher	335
	Scientific Summary	173
	Bibliographical Notices	188

CONTENTS—NO. II.

ART. XVI.—The Revolution of 1698, and Macaulay's History - - - - 209
XVII.—The Age of the Material Universe 225
XVIII.—Decline of the Church - - 243
XIX.—Review of Cosmogonies - 257
XX.—The Republic - - - 276
XXI.—Review of Education and Crime - 284
XXII.—Mission of Democracy - - 300
XXIII.—To a Belle - - - 300
XXIV.—I was in Prison - - - 310
XXV.—Battle Fields - - - 334
XXVI.—Ohio, her Resources and Prospects - 335
XXVII.—Newton and His Discoveries - 349
Scientific Summary - - - 373
Bibliographical Notices - - 377
XXVIII.—Mrs. Lewis' Poems - - - 404

PREFACE.

THAT the strong loves of the Heart may find a congenial echo—that the searching Intellect may find a place where no partial or one-sided Philosophy is presented—that Human Rights may have a fearless defender—that the Poor, the Ignorant and the Oppressed may be encouraged by a well-grounded Hope—that old Error, whether Social, Religious or Political, may have an unflinching opponent—that all existing institutions may be subjected to the strictest scrutiny—that Literature, Art and Science may have an advocate in the West—and, finally, that the resources of our country, and particularly of the West, may be exhibited, and the importance of all branches of Industry set forth, this work is commenced.